American Secretary of State Hillary Clinton disclosed her country's hidden support of the recent riots in Iran.

Speaking in CNN's Fareed Zakaria GPS program she said, "We did not want to get between the protests and demonstrations of the Iranian people and the leadership and we knew that if we step in too soon the leadership would use us to unify the country against the protestors."

She said that the American government has done a lot behind the scene to support the protestors and empower them without getting in the way.

We will continue the support of oppositions, she reiterated.

Talking about engagement with IRI government she said that it is American president's policy to communicate in a number ways to the Iranian government.

"The President has also said that we should not wait for Iran's response more than September," Clinton added.

Repeating last threats against Iran, Clinton said, "If there is a response it needs to be on a fast track."
