

UN head faces mistrust in Iran

From http://www.guardian.co.uk In Tehran, the United Nations office Director-General, Boutros Boutros-Ghali, arrived in Tehran yesterday to begin his first visit to the city of a UN head in Iran since the the outbreak of the Iran-Iraq war. In a statement issued after his arrival, he said that he was pleased to see the UN Secretary-General in the city of the Islamic Republic of Iran. He said that he was confident that the UN would be able to play a constructive role in the settlement of the conflict between the two countries.

The UN Secretary-General
 said that he was confident that the UN would be able to play a constructive role in the settlement of the
 conflict between the two countries. He said that he was confident that the UN would be able to play a constructive role in the settlement of the conflict between the two countries.
 He said that he was confident that the UN would be able to play a
 constructive role in the
 settlement of the conflict
 between the two countries.

He said that he was
 confident that the UN would
 be able to play a
 constructive role in the
 settlement of the conflict
 between the two countries.
 He said that he was
 confident that the UN would
 be able to play a
 constructive role in the
 settlement of the conflict
 between the two countries.

He said that he was
 confident that the UN would
 be able to play a
 constructive role in the
 settlement of the conflict
 between the two countries.
 He said that he was
 confident that the UN would
 be able to play a
 constructive role in the
 settlement of the conflict between the two countries.

5/27/2011

Article - Untitled Article

AP adds: The United States has started work on a resolution calling for UN sanctions against Iran, apparently expecting that Dr. Waltheim's visit to Tehran will not secure the release of the Americans held hostage for 58 days.

Guardian News and Media Limited